Miller Thomson LLP’s Health Industry Group is pleased to announce that Fundamentals of Health Information Management is now available.

Published by the Canadian Health Care Association in collaboration with the Canadian Health Information Management Association, Fundamentals of Health Information Management was written by experts in the health information management field and peer reviewed. The textbook is based on the latest research and covers CHIMA’s three domains of practice. It features chapters on the Canadian health care system; health informatics; the legal aspects of health information practice; electronic health records; health information standards; ethics issues; and each chapter discusses the role of the HIM professional.

Kathryn M. Frelick, HBSc LLB and Janela Jovellano, BA, LLB of Miller Thomson LLP are co-authors of the chapter, “Legal Aspects of Health Information Management.”

The learning objectives of this chapter enable learners to:

- Demonstrate knowledge of the structure of the Canadian legal system in relation to health care organizations and to health information
- Interpret statutes, legal documents and correspondence
- Demonstrate an understanding of privacy, security and confidentiality in health information practice, including policies and principles of access and disclosure
- Prioritize requests for health information according to established standards and practice
- Validate legitimacy of requests for health information
- Select appropriate methods of access to and disclosure of health information
- Implement a system to log/track disclosure of health information
- Educate people about health information rights and options
- Select appropriate information in response to requests
- Interpret health record content for release of information
