Élodie Guay specializes in civil and commercial litigation in the construction law sector. Her practice focuses on construction law, and she represents clients before the courts or through alternative dispute resolution processes. She drafts and reviews documents related to construction disputes, conducts strategic file analysis, and performs research.

Élodie assists various stakeholders in managing complex disputes, drawing on rigorous legal analysis and a deep understanding of factual and strategic issues. Her work includes matters related to legal construction hypothecs, construction defects and deficiencies, as well as the design, modification, or termination of contracts.

She stands out for her structured and transparent approach, based on clear communication and careful attention to each client's objectives. Committed to offering practical and pragmatic solutions, she implements effective strategies tailored to her clients' legal and commercial realities, providing professional and consistent support.
