With his trusty graphing calculator in hand, Thierry Méance puts his dual expertise in engineering and law to work for his clients in a variety of complex cases. His training in mechanical engineering from Polytechnique

Montréal and his experience as a project manager in the aeronautics sector have equipped him to tackle issues with a keen eye for detail and a critical mind.

With a Bachelor of Laws and a Juris Doctor in North American Common Law from the Université de Montréal, he weighs in on questions ranging from municipal zoning to contaminated soils, and from quarries to sand pits. His versatility allows him to come up with personalized solutions and precise legal advice when guiding clients through the technical and regulatory aspects of environmental law.
